She glanced down a typewritten sheet, then took the trouble to explain. There used to be beaux; every decently attractive girl had them. Beaux are suitors you can be proud of. But that is all over. I dont know any woman past the college boy stage who has beaux. Now and then some stupid man wants to marry us, but it is never anyone we can be proud of: if it were, wed marry him. So we take to conventions. We have to do something. Of all the--Marie Rose! Mrs. Sperry lifted a hand to stop the couple passing. Jean says there are no more men in the world. Is that your experience Marie Rose dropped down on the foot of her chair. I wish there werent, she said. She was smiling with a hard brightness that made her look...
