His measure unavoidably revived the momentous practical questions, hitherto only superficially treated, respecting the soundness of this distinction and the extent to which it was applicable. Mr. Townshend had relinquished the benefit of it for his Act when he announced it in the Preamble to be an Act for the collection of revenue; and its several provisions expressed this purpose so plainly as to leave no room for misapprehension. Still, as the money which it called for was to be collected by custom-house officers in the form of duties on imported goods, the public mind was liable to some confusion as to the consistency of a condemnation of the Act as unconstitutional and wrongful, with the acknowledgments which had been repeatedly made of the legitimacy of commercial regulations. In the discussion now provoked, the obscurity was cleared away; and by the time when the Circular was sent...
