Not illustrated. 1851 Excerpt: .our china will be found to be of greater purity than usual; and the Rose Dubarry, which was the name given to a colour employed at Sevres in the ornamentation of a set of porcelain during this favourite s reign, will be found revived for the first time in this country. In statuary porcelain, or Parian--a most interesting and almost new application, --we have in addition to numerous good examples of known groups and single figures, some very fine specimens of the application of china to the multiplication of some of the purest specimens of high art. The statues of the Pleiades, Ino and Bacchus, the Return of the Prodigal, and a Grecian tripod, may be regarded as remarkable examples in this line, since the difficulties which arise in the designing of the figure, the finished one being one-third less in size than when in damp clay, and the danger of complete fusion during firing, require an unusual exactitude of attention. These figures are a true porcelain, the mass being fused throughout. Stoneware of various kinds, and many novel adaptations of pottery, will be found in this group. Against the wall may be sought examples of steam printing, for transferring to printed earthenware, and many choice examples of panels for decorative purposes, and some specimens also of painting on glass to which we have been brought by continuing our right-hand course. North Gallery, The contents of this gallery are of a very miscellaneous character, amongst...
